

TEACHING EXPERIENCE

University of Arizona

Instructor with full responsibility (11 sections)

Macroeconomic Institutions and Policy: Fall 2007 (220 students), Summer 2007, Summer 2006 (two sections), Summer 2005

Global and Financial Economics and Strategies: Summer 2007, Summer 2006, Winter 2005, Summer 2005

Intermediate Macroeconomics: Fall 2005

Principles of Economics: Winter 2004

Teaching Assistant

Statistics (Graduate Level): Fall 2004

Econometrics (Graduate Level): Spring 2005

Economics of Strategy: Fall 2006

Principles of Economics: Spring 2007, Spring 2006, Fall 2003

Economic History: Fall 2004, Spring 2005

Introduction to Statistics: Fall 2003, Spring 2004

Clemson University

Teaching Assistant

Principles of Microeconomics: Fall 2002

Principles of Macroeconomics: Spring 2003

Labor Economics: Fall 2002, Spring 2003

TESTIMONIALS

“Not only did I find the material to be very interesting, but I've already applied my knowledge of economics in a column I wrote for the Daily Wildcat about price increases in the Zona Zoo pass (student cheering section at UA sporting events). I analyzed why the athletics department successfully raised the price to make more revenue through elasticity of demand.”

“I now find myself excited about reading the Money sections of azcentral.com and cnn.com on almost a daily basis, since taking this course. I understand much more of what I'm reading, now. Just getting my foot in the door with this has me much more interested in economics, so thank you for giving me the background to explore this further.”

“While the subject material was interesting, the part of the course that I found most enjoyable/useful was having to write my own notes as you lectured. Drawing my own graphs, paying attention to capture all of the material, and thinking critically about the day's current events all contributed positively to the course experience.”

“Your class was thought provoking. I really liked how you emphasized foreign opportunity because I haven't heard other teachers really talk about the opportunities overseas. I hope you get to teach more classes in the coming semesters, your zeal makes both you and your teaching approach unique.”