ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

First, I would like to thank my dissertation committee, whose guidance has been friendly and supportive every step along the way. I am especially grateful to my advisor Tom Bever, who seems to have an excellent sense of when to push me to try harder and when to express confidence in me. Knowing that my advisor has my best interest at heart has made my graduate school experience a positive one. I am also extremely grateful to Heidi Harley, who has pored over every sentence of my dissertation, returning heaps of valuable and constructive criticism with a warm smile. I would also like to thank Merrill Garrett, Ken Forster, and Audrey Holland for giving me their precious time and wise advice.

Second, I express my sincere gratitude to the other people who provided me with the assistance, training, and information that made this dissertation research possible. The people who deserve recognition for many hours of assistance with the experiments are Selene Gardner, Andria Ligas, Bradly Simpson, and Hollis Weidenbacher. Raffaella Folli provided crucial advice on the event structure of particular verbs and continues to be an inspiring collaborator. Connie Clarke, Ken McRae, and Dave Townsend provided data for reanalysis. Rachel Hayes, Patricia Jones, Christopher Nicholas, and Natasha Warner provided valuable advice and assistance with statistics. Also, I have not forgotten that Shari Speer first taught me experimental methods for studying sentence processing when I worked with her as undergraduate assistant some years ago.

For research and conference travel funding, I am grateful to the National Science Foundation and to the following groups at the University of Arizona: the Cognitive Science Program, the Language and Cognition Laboratory, the Graduate and Professional Student Council, and the Linguistics Department.

I do not have space here to mention all of the people who have helped me in various ways. Here are some of them: Montse Sanz, Janet Nicol, Cecile McKee, Eloise Jelinek, Andrew Carnie, Andrew Barss, Katrina Treadwell, Scott Jackson, Xu Xu, Charles Lin, Shiahui Chan, Christine Mahoney, Matt Finkbeiner, Joe Erker, Rachel Sussman, Shravan Vasishth, Oren Sadeh Leicht, Chuck Clifton, Mike Dickey, Laura Wagner, Fernanda Ferreira, Steve Seegmiller, Bill Badecker, Richie Kayne, Edwin Williams, Jim Hartman, Nova Hinrichs, Rosemary Emery, Jennie Bradley, and Gwen Weber.

Finally, I would like to thank my friends and family, whose caring means the world to me. James, Mary Kris, Monica, Peter, Mike, Joe, Jonathan, John, and Will have all listened to me talk about the dissertation process and have offered some extremely helpful advice. I am also grateful to Siobhan and Steve at Gentle Ben's Brewery for providing stability in my social life and to my roommate Tiina for being understanding about the dirty dishes. I am especially grateful to my mom and dad, whose plans to come to Tucson for graduation motivated me to finish the dissertation more than anything else could have!

DEDICATION

To my family, Mom, Dad, Cari, Colin, and Nana.
