

I wish to inform those of you in search of my 2003 paper “Invisible Bodies, the Disinherited, and the Production of Space in the Landmark Forum” that I have removed it from my website. The principle reason for doing so is that it no longer represents my thinking about Landmark Education, which has undergone significant development since I attempted this initial analysis of the spatial practices of arrangement Landmark employs toward effecting shifts in mood and understanding in its participants. Since it was allowing various people to promote a particular and one-sided agenda concerning this very complex phenomenon, I felt it best to elicit direct requests for the paper. I can be reached at adolphous1@hotmail.com

I am currently working through a significant revision of this paper, as I’m including it in a dissertation length study into the controversial value of rhetorical education, its aims and methods, and its effectiveness in developing subjectivities capable of engaging with the uncertainties of everyday life with practical wisdom.

Thank you,

Drew

Drew Kopp
PhD Candidate
Rhetoric, Composition, and the Teaching of English
University of Arizona